Transformation “Managing Change from the Workers’ Perspective”

Organizations today cannot survive without becoming adept at change. Likewise, today's workforce must learn to adapt their attitudes and practices to an ever-changing environment. To do that effectively, workers must first understand what is driving organizational change. They must be aware of how individuals (like themselves) interpret and respond to change. And, they need to know exactly how the change cycle works.

Workshop Content

This 4-hour training program will help participants gain expertise in laying the groundwork necessary for adapting their personal responses to the forces that are currently driving organizational change.

Who Should Attend

All members of the workforce who are involved in, and/or impacted by, business improvement outcomes and want to better understand the many benefits that are derivatives of the change/transformation process.

Workshop Objectives

- Expand attendees' knowledge, understanding, and perspective of the effects of change.
- Assist individuals and groups in understanding their own change issues and strengths.
- Examine the four stages of the Change Cycle.
